Evolving Breastfeeding Practices ~ Increasing Success and Enjoyment
by Jeanne Batacan

While breastfeeding initiation rates continue to rise, early breastfeeding cessation rates at 3 through 12 months remain stagnant. They are also well below the AAP, Healthy People 2010, World Health Organization, and UNICEF recommendation of exclusive breastfeeding/breast milk for the first 6 months and continued breastfeeding for at least 12 to 24 months.

This issue prompted Dr. Suzanne Colson and her research team to investigate what part mothers play with innate, instinctive breastfeeding behaviors and if, what they termed “biological nurturing” (comfortable, laid-back, natural positions that use gravity), could be the “glue” that could lead to longer, more enjoyable breastfeeding duration.

Indeed, their research found that not only did babies display instinctive breastfeeding behaviors when placed skin-to-skin on their mothers, but mothers themselves demonstrated reflexive behaviors that helped their babies reach and attach to the breast. An article in the journal, Early Human Development, an international journal concerned with the continuity of fetal and postnatal life said, “Dr. Colson found that in contrast to prevailing advice that breastfeeding mothers should sit upright and support the baby’s back and head, biological nurturing involves semi-reclined positioning with the baby prone and in full close contact with the mother’s body. Babies in full-biological nursing positions employ reflexes to locate the breast and latch without back support, and their mothers innately assist them in that task. This research offers a compelling case that breastfeeding continues to be mediated by newborn reflexive behavior well after birth, that postures and positions may either support or hinder these reflexes, and that by inhibiting or overriding instinctive maternal behaviors, typical breastfeeding instruction may be counterproductive.

Research demonstrates that, left undisturbed after birth, healthy term newborns perform a sequence of reflexive pre-feeding behaviors culminating in self-attachment to the mother’s breast. Despite this normal behavior, many breastfeeding mother-infant pairs encounter feeding problems in the early days and weeks. These problems can cause women to discontinue exclusive breastfeeding earlier than planned.

While the phenomenon of newborn self-attachment is well documented, there is a much smaller body of literature mapping newborn reflexive behaviors to breastfeeding effectiveness after the initial feeding. The Colson research provides evidence that an approach to breastfeeding that proponents have termed “biological nurturing” stimulates reflexive behaviors in newborn and mother alike. These synchronized reflexes seem to support both effective, pain-free latch and ingestion of milk”.[1]

Biological nurturing encourages and allows mothers and babies to do what they instinctively know how to do...

When mothers and babies start off breastfeeding using biological nurturing and laid-back breastfeeding positions early on, babies easily adapt to more traditional upright positions and are able to maintain good latch and milk transfer. Mothers benefit by feeling more empowered, confident and competent.

So, what is biological nurturing?

- Mother-baby positions whose interactions release innate (instinctive) behaviors
- Mother-baby innate behaviors aiding latch and sustaining milk transfer
- More than ‘just’ skin-to skin contact at the time of birth

Biological nurturing encourages and allows mothers and babies to do what they instinctively know how to do – in comfortable, sustainable positions that enhance and promote hormonal bonding, attachment and ease of breastfeeding. Biological nurturing introduces the concept of nurturing and enjoyment. Supporting mothering behaviors that increase pleasure in breastfeeding will help extend breastfeeding duration and improve long term health in both mother and baby.

Biological nurturing is more than nipple to nose and tummy to tummy, it is more than upright or side lying postures, cross-cradle or clutch holds, it is more than a correct sucking technique. Biological nurturing is a two person, whole-body experience introducing research evidence proposing many baby positions and a range of effective, comfortable sustainable, pain-free maternal postures.

Label Audit For Your Diaper Count
An easy way to have us audit your diaper inventory is to fill in a blank on the label on our blue hamper liner bag where it now says "Diapers left at home: _____" When we add up the number left + the soiled count + the number of diapers delivered that day, we can determine if your rotation is correct. Some customers do this every week. Some do it once a month. “If you are on two or more types of diapers, please note which size you are auditing (25 Reg, 10 Mega).

◊ Please don’t write notes for your driver or the office here. The driver may not see the label and the office will not see it. Write these notes on a piece of paper stapled to the top of the bag.

Women Step Up to Breast Feed Motherless Infant
Robbie Goodrich is an incredible father. When his wife and mother to just born Moses died from complications of childbirth, Goodrich found a way to provide not only breastmilk for his baby, but also breastfeeding.

Moses has been breastfeeding 6 times a day and receiving bottles of breastmilk during the night, thanks to 20 women committed to providing this ‘service.’ Goodrich stated, “It’s commitment, passion - it’s love. It’s an act of love.”

Moses is the perfect name for this little one, as Moses was the first baby mentioned in the Bible to be fed from a wet nurse. Pharaoh’s daughter ‘adopted’ Moses into the Egyptian royal family when he was found in a basket in the bulrushes. His Hebrew mother, Jochebed, had hid him when the Pharaoh ordered all newborn Hebrew boys to be killed. When Pharoah’s daughter sent out to find a wet nurse for the baby, unknowingly Moses’ own mother was selected.

Bay Area Moms Benefit from Your Birth Experience!

Take this opportunity to share your birth experiences (good and not so good) in a way that will help make a difference for new mothers not only in the Bay Area but throughout the United States. The purpose of The Birth Survey is to provide women with a venue to give feedback about their birth experiences with specific doctors, midwives, hospitals and birth centers, and to make this feedback available on this website as searchable reports. These searchable reports will be a resource to help other women and families to make more informed choices when choosing maternity care providers and birth settings and provide practitioners and institutions with feedback for quality of care improvement efforts.

Preliminary results are now available on line at: www.thebirthsurvey.com

WANTED—Mother’s Milk
The Mother’s Milk Bank, located at Valley Medical Center in San Jose, needs mother’s milk donations. If you are breastfeeding and have more milk than your baby needs, please consider becoming a milk donor. Milk donations save lives. There are numerous other volunteer positions available if you are not a nursing mother. For more information, please check the Milk Bank’s website at www.milkbanksj.org or contact them directly at 408.998.4550.

The only single-use diaper on the market today that doesn’t contain super absorbent gelling chemicals (AGM) is Tushies. They are a healthier single-use diaper than the Seventh Generation, Nature Boy & Girl, Tendercare Plus, the G Diaper, Whole Baby Diapers from Whole Foods, and the mainstream brands. Flushable and compostable diapers require a single use of all raw materials to produce, including crude oil, for just a few hours use. There is no such thing as an eco friendly hybrid or single-use diaper. No need to pay more for false eco-claims.

See the chemicals yourself: Cut open the padding of a Tushies diaper and you’ll find a natural blend cotton and wood pulp fluff. Chemical-Free! Open the padding of any other disposable diaper and you can shake out white granules. These are the acrylic acid polymer salts. Put the granules in water and watch them turn into gel. This is the chemical or single-use diaper. No need to pay more for false eco-claims.

Tushies (33% cotton/66% wood pulp blend)
Size 1 Newborn 4-5 lbs. 30 / bag
